A Beverly Hills compound that was once home to actors Danny DeVito and Rhea Perlman is coming on the market for $85 million.

Mr. DeVito and Ms. Perlman sold the home for about $28 million in 2015. Its current owners, real-estate developers Stuart and Stephanie Liner, extensively renovated the property for an undisclosed sum, increasing the total square footage across four structures to around 29,000 square feet.

Located at the top of a cul-de-sac near the Los Angeles Country Club, the compound includes a seven-bedroom main house, several guesthouses and an eight-car garage. The stand-alone entertainment building includes Mr. DeVito's original screening room, a wine room, a lounge and a cigar room. A mechanized wall lifts to separate the screening room from the remainder of the space.

More Private Properties

Mr. Liner, 56, said he and his wife tried to think of every imaginable amenity. A private elevator leads from the closet in the master suite to a beauty salon downstairs. "A person who buys this house is likely to have a lot of staff," Mr. Liner said.

The couple has bought and renovated 21 homes in the Los Angeles area in addition to their day jobs; he works as an attorney, she as an interior designer.

The original DeVito estate was on about 1.77 acres. The Liners split the lot in two, leaving the current property on about 1.29 acres. They are building an additional property on the other portion of the lot, Mr. Liner said.

The house next door to the compound, which was home to the late Hollywood studio executive Brad Grey, recently sold for close to $70 million.

Drew Fenton of Hilton & Hyland has the listing.
